

Accounting for Primary Producers

“Being a primary producer in this country has never been easy but a decade of drought followed by floods in some areas has made it exasperating and financially crippling for some. As a consequence it’s no surprise to see farming numbers in decline, however, this also represents an opportunity at the same time.”

We understand how tough it is to run a farm. Just like other business owners you have to contend with issues like finance, GST compliance and staff but in most cases you have to deal with long hours, seasonal demand, the climate and safety issues with machinery and equipment. If you work with livestock like cattle, sheep, chickens or even fish and seafood you face some unique challenges. Farmers who produce wheat, grain, fruit and vegetables also have to deal with a host of issues including politics, prices, pollution and interest rates. Australia’s decade of drought and subsequent floods just highlight the variables and frustration farmers face.

Given most farming pursuits are multi-generational we work with our clients with an eye on the future. Business structures are crucial while planning and cash flow forecasts are essential. Apart from assisting our farming clients with the usual compliance and bookkeeping work we also provide financial modelling services to assess ‘what if’ scenarios, cash flows, finance submissions and the finance of land and machinery purchases.

Accounting for Primary Producers

We are very strong on the concept of 'beginning with the end in mind' and for that reason we make sure our farming clients have the right business structure. The wrong choice is almost impossible to unravel without significant financial, tax, legal and capital gains tax implications. When assessing structures we also take into account issues including asset protection, your family situation, profit forecasts and future plans to admit new partners before making any decisions.

As accountants we can do some financial modelling to project your best and worst case profit scenarios. By adjusting the key variables including price and various inputs like feed and seed we can evaluate the impact on profit and cash flow. We can also assist you with farm viability assessments, farm risk management and strategic business plans.
